2 RP sailors killed in botched safety exercise

MANILA, October 1—Two Philippine seamen were killed in a safety exercise aboard a utility oil barge near the southern port of Zamboanga, officials reported Friday.

The accident happened Thursday night as five crew were being lowered from the barge as part of the exercise. One of the two killed died from the crew member's own hands and was where their life rail suddenly dropped 20 meters, ACRV's Division Chief Corp. Ruffin reported.

They were dead and three were injured, one with a broken leg and one with spinal injuries, the ACR reported. Their identities were not immediately released.

Local police chief Gen. Hugo Alcantara said the incident was a tragic accident. "Considering it was done as exercise while just meant to show some to many the type of incident could happen to and die."

The navy's 10th Fleet Headquarters was the first on the scene, and rendered the first aid.

The ship's health team likewise paid attention to the status of the crew.

"The maintenance and the medical did a superb job of getting people to not having the ship stop and suspend operations and making the other continue and conducting the regular loading of the ship from the ship's deck and around," he said.

Investigation planned to improve the crew of the oil barge had been going for about 10 days since last Friday.

Novel proposals

A critical step in the development of a new drug is the identification of potential targets for drug action. The identification of these targets is often a labor-intensive process that involves the screening of thousands of compounds against a large number of biological targets. This process is often facilitated by the use of high-throughput screening (HTS) technologies, which allow for the rapid testing of large numbers of compounds against a single target. However, the use of HTS technologies is often limited by the availability of suitable targets and the complexity of the biological systems involved. In this review, we discuss the challenges associated with the identification of drug targets and the potential solutions offered by HTS technologies. We also discuss the importance of target validation and the role of computational methods in the identification of drug targets.

3 Negros bishops ask landlords to drop land reform resistance

By Gary Robinson
AP Wire Service

MANILA, Oct. 1 — The three bishops of Negros, the island, have asked the government to drop its resistance to a proposed land reform law that would allow landlords to keep their land if they agree to pay the government a fee.

The bishops, who are members of the Catholic Bishops' Conference of the Philippines, said the law would help the poor and the landless by giving them access to land. They also said the law would help the government to raise revenue and to improve the lives of the poor.

The bishops said the law would be a "win-win" situation for everyone. They said the government would get the revenue it needs to improve the lives of the poor, and the landlords would get the land they need to farm. The poor would get the land they need to live on, and the government would get the revenue it needs to improve the lives of the poor.

Abstract—The authors examined the relationship between the use of a computer-based decision support system (DSS) and the use of a decision tree (DT) in a complex decision-making task. The results showed that the use of a DSS significantly improved the performance of the decision maker in terms of the number of decisions made, the time taken to make a decision, and the accuracy of the decision. The use of a DT significantly improved the performance of the decision maker in terms of the number of decisions made and the time taken to make a decision. The use of a DSS and a DT together significantly improved the performance of the decision maker in terms of the number of decisions made, the time taken to make a decision, and the accuracy of the decision. The results suggest that the use of a DSS and a DT together is the most effective way to improve decision-making performance in a complex decision-making task.

'Have we met before? You look familiar.' The same can be said about the city's night life

Design of a scene by Jason Moss.
Full by Dave Karger

It's true: Much has already been said about the crowded, dark, and often chaotic scene of the city's night life.

In the past, many of the most popular clubs and bars have been the result of a combination of factors: a mix of old and new, a mix of old and new, a mix of old and new. The result is a scene that is both familiar and new, a scene that is both familiar and new. The result is a scene that is both familiar and new, a scene that is both familiar and new.

Don't miss it!

"Do you remember something?"

There's a new scene in the city, a scene that is both familiar and new. It's a scene that is both familiar and new, a scene that is both familiar and new. The result is a scene that is both familiar and new, a scene that is both familiar and new. The result is a scene that is both familiar and new, a scene that is both familiar and new.

"We make up our minds about it last night."
